Judy McDonald is an affiliate scientist and part-time human kinetics professor with the Faculty of Health Sciences and the Institute of Population Health at the University of Ottawa. She has enjoyed 15 years of developing an approach, from original work with Olympic athletes, to assess performance excellence through frontline preparedness, specializing in surgical, aviation, policing. Her research program, entitled Operational Readiness Assessments, focuses on high-risk workplaces—where the standards of excellence have serious life and death consequences. She combines her academic foundations with her 25 years of municipal work experience in program evaluation, facility management and public-private partnerships.
